Fee waivers given to varsity athletes

By MARCIA EIDEL
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Forty-two per cent of UM varsity student-athletes, or 125, received resident fee waivers this year, according to figures from the Registrar's office and the Financial Aid Office. Six per cent, or 510, of the entire in-state student body are allowed resident waivers by Montana law.

Out of -state student-athletes were allotted 48 of the 183 available non-resident waivers, according to the same offices. Fifty are allotted to Black students, 15 to the graduate school, 10 to domestic exchange students and 10 to foreign students.

Other allotments for resident fee waivers go to the law school and the band; 10 each. The remainder go to other students.

Jack Swarthout, athletic director and head football coach, said a large percentage of the fee waivers are allotted to his department "because of what athletics do for students, the community and alumni."

The six per cent allotted for resident fee waivers is to be taken from an estimated enrollment for the next year. According to the Financial Aid Office, the estimated figure for 1970-71 was 8,500, allowing 510 resident fee waivers.

Robert Fedore, dean of students, said that fee waivers are awarded on the basis of academic achievement and financial need.

Don Mullen, director of financial aid, said that in the past, fee waivers have been handled by the dean of students. The special departmental allotments are made "by agreement of the Administration." According to Mullen, precedents for departmental allotments had been set by Administrations dating back to 1960.

According to George Mitchell, administrative vice president, criteria for fee waivers in specific departments are determined within that department. Therefore, the criteria within a department may vary from those considered by the Financial Aid Office.

Non-resident fee waivers are to be given to two per cent of the gross enrollment, according to Montana law. The figure for these fees is derived from the gross enrollment of the previous year—9,134 for 1969-70.

The Montana Board of Regents has designated several types of resident fee waivers to be excluded from the allotted six per cent, including high school honor scholarships and Indian scholarships.

According to Mullen, all graduate assistants and those on fellowships receive fee waivers as part of their compensation. Presently, these waivers are not included in the two per cent non-resident allotment.

The state auditor's report made recommendations in two specific areas concerning fee waivers. First, it recommended that the University use an average enrollment figure for the allotment of non-resident waivers rather than the one it uses. The figure the University now uses is an accumulation of all who have registered at the University at any time during the year. Withdrawals are not presently subtracted from the total. The report also recommended that fee waivers given to graduate assistants be counted as part of the two per cent non-resident allotment.

In response to this recommendation, a committee has been formed by Mitchell to study present fee waiver policies and make recommendations to the president.

According to Mitchell, the committee will consist of himself, Fedore, Mullen, Richard Landini, academic vice president, and Richard Shannon, professor of forestry and chairman of the scholarship committee. Mitchell said that this committee will review present policies concerning fee waivers and make recommendations for improvement and change. Final action will be taken by the president, he said.

In reference to the present fee waiver situation, Mitchell said, "It seems to be a rather vague area at this time."

Pantzer opposes fee strike

By BOBBIE NELSON
Montana Kaimin Reporter

Students not paying $8 of the $15 activity fee for Spring Quarter and attending classes are not "duly registered students" and will not receive credit for these classes, President Robert Pantzer said yesterday.

Pantzer's comments referred to a proposal being distributed to faculty members today requesting that they allow students to attend classes who withhold the $8 of the fee which goes to the athletic department.

The proposal was drawn up by the Student Fee Committee composed of Tim Seastedt, senior in wildlife biology and zoology, and Alan Freeman, senior in forestry.

According to the proposal, the Student Fee Committee does not believe that Central Board acted in the students' interests when it allocated $173,000 to the athletic department last month and only about $2,500 to the Library Fund.

"A number of students wish to withhold $8 of their fees and put it into a library withholding fund during Spring Quarter registration of 1971," the proposal stated.

The proposal acknowledged the possibility that "students who withhold partial payment of fees may not be recognized by the Administration as enrolled students," but requests that faculty members "recognize these students and allow them to take the course."

Seastedt said names of the faculty who agree to the proposal will be published in the Kaimin "hopefully" by Thursday so that students will know before pre-registration Thursday and Friday "which faculty members will support them and allow them to attend class."

Pantzer said the individual faculty member does not have the right to give a student credit for a class if the student is not properly registered.

"It is a matter of being appropriately registered," he said. "Part of being registered is paying the $8 fee."

Pantzer said there are many projects, using the library fund as an example, which are "helpful and necessary" but which cannot be budgeted on a quarterly basis.

Seastedt said he and Freeman had erred in writing the proposal by saying that the Board of Regents "dictated" how much of the student fee must go to athletics.

The policy determining the method of allocating funds for the 1971-72 budget, Pantzer said, was decided last year by a faculty athletic committee and a Central Board subcommittee.

Central Board has the power to increase the athletic budget by 20 per cent or decrease it by 12 per cent.

Pantzer said he believed the students who wrote the proposal to withhold the $8 fee were "sincere" but that they did not have a "basic understanding" of the budgeting process.

He explained that when Central Board voted recently on the athletic budget and cut the $174,000 allocation by $1,000 that this budget is for the academic year 1971-72.

If students withhold the $8 fee, Pantzer said, "it would be injurious to an already established program budgeted a year ago."

Withholding the fee will certainly affect the Spring Quarter athletic programs of baseball, track, golf, tennis and spring football which are depending on these funds, he said.

Pantzer said he thought the varsity athletic budget had gone through a "democratic process" in Central Board.

He recommended that those students interested in changing the amount of the varsity athletic allocation "look to the future" and "remedy the situation through the legislative process."

Students concerned with reducing the athletic budget he said, should elect CB representatives who will promise to vote for a reduction in the 1972-73 budget.

Seastedt said the proposal to withhold the $8 fee and put it into the library withholding fund arose from the results of a student poll taken shortly before Central Board voted on the athletic budget.

The results of the poll, which surveyed 22 per cent of the students, showed that 52 per cent of the students polled wanted a cut in the athletic budget, 24 per cent wanted the athletic budget to remain the same as last year and 24 per cent wanted the budget increased.

Draft boards were informed

UM Registrar Wayne Woolston said Friday that without his knowledge an employee of his office has been informing draft boards when students drop out of school.

Woolston was reported Thursday in the Montana Kaimin as denying a charge made by Mike Wisocki, UM draft counselor, that "someone in the registrar's office is happily sending information to draft boards." Woolston said he denied the charge last week before discovering that one of his employees was notifying boards of status changes.

"As long as I am in this office and it's legal it will never happen again," Woolston said. He said he was considering firing the errant employee, whom he did not name. He attributed the breach of policy to a "lack of written procedure" in his office.

The official policy of the registrar's office is to obtain a student's permission before releasing status information requested by a draft board, he said.

Fund cutback by Legislature could cripple UM

By HEIDI GASSER
Special to the Montana Kaimin

The state of Montana holds UM's purse strings, and it is threatening to tighten them.

In a recent audit of the University System, the Montana Legislature criticized some of the system's financial operations. The Legislature cited UM's lack of central control over expenditures and an inadequate, cumbersome accounting system and made recommendations that would cost the University System more than $1 million to put into effect.

News analysis

Now the 1971 Legislature is apparently trying to be conservative in making out its biennial state budget. The state institution that will be affected most by a tighter budget, however, will be the University System, one of the biggest users of state money.

According to Calvin Murphy, UM business manager, UM would receive less money than it received in 1969 if state appropriations are cut. The 1969 state appropriation amounted to $6,120,000, and with a proposed cut of $750,000 this year, UM's financial aid would amount to $5,370,000.

Murphy said such a financial setback is made even more serious because of increasing inflation and increasing enrollment, which would result in larger growth and financial obligations. He said if this happens, it may be necessary to cut or eliminate various University departments, cut Physical Plant activity, decrease University employees' salaries or increase student fees.

UM had requested $10,688,966 from the state its 1972 allocation.

Academic Vice President Richard Lan-

dini said, however, that no definite plans have been made yet and none would be made unless the threatened budget cut should become a reality. He said cuts in program expansion and faculty would be implemented only after careful study.

"The existing programs and faculty would be the last to go," he said.

If budget conservation means academic regression for Montana, perhaps the Legislature should re-examine its motives and actions. The service the University provides is intrinsically tied to the future of the state and the future of the state is what the Legislature is allegedly concerned with.

One vital problem is the financing of the New Library. The 1971 Legislature was to consider allocation of funds for Phase II of the project, but Gov. Forrest Anderson's new biennial budget did not include recommendation of such funds.

Accreditation of the University could hinge upon the enlargement and improvement of library facilities.

A sum of $3.2 million has already been allocated for Phase I of the new structure, and construction will begin this spring, to be completed in 1972. However, if the University must wait until the next Legislature to receive funds for Phase II, Murphy says construction could not begin until a year after the legislative session ends. This would leave Phase I empty for at least a year, for much of the Phase II money is to be used for equipping the portion of the Library constructed in Phase I.

The legislative audit recommendations favored more state control of University financial operations and of how teachers spend their time in "use of the taxpayer's money."

The state wants to incorporate all institutions' records into centralized, uniform accounts to keep closer track of where each state dollar goes and to eliminate the risk of illegal use of state funds.

State Controller Doyle Saxby told the Legislature that a good accounting system is partly dependent on a good budget system and that budget appropriations should be a "control device" on state agencies.

UM administrators seem confident that the present system, which is the result of revision and study by a top U.S. accounting firm, is adequate.

President Robert Pantzer says it is more efficient for the University to keep its own accounts and make the necessary specific data calculations than for the state to have to do this, or for both systems to make the same calculations. He says the accounting system has worked well and the need is for more personnel to operate it and keep it up to date.

There seems to be a need for some simplification and updating, however, as can be witnessed by the huge deficits being incurred by UM Program Council, only a small part of the University's system. Last year the University lost a total of $26,900 on entertainment programs. The loss was blamed on lack of supervision of the Council, lack of student participation and inadequate bookkeeping practices.

This year the Program Council adviser has been replaced and programs are being advertised extensively to encourage larger audiences, but money is still being lost. For example, the Council just reported a $2,586 loss on the Norman Luboff Choir concert Feb. 12. This loss could be partly attributed to the four-day weekend and partly to the scheduling of the concert little more than one week after the Vienna Boys' Choir concert.

However, the University also lost $530 on this concert, which performed to a full house and brought in extra money from 80 "standing room only" tickets. If a deficit occurs from this type of arrangement, there must be something wrong somewhere.

The state wants more control over institutional finances, knowledge of where money is being spent and why.

The audit's recommendation to account more closely for faculty members' time raised a protest among University administrators and faculty. While they agreed with the state that education is of foremost importance and the best utilization of time should also be the best utilization of money, they say it is impossible to keep track of every minute a faculty member spends on the job.

Landini says education is "just not the type of profession that lends itself to clocking in hours." He said there are peaks of activity, such as during registration, midterms and final week—getting grades in, serving on committees and counseling individual students.

School is not a "9 to 5" operation, for either a student or a faculty member. They take their work, their ideas and their concerns home with them at night, on trips, into the weekend. No one can keep track of the time spent thinking about a subject, developing a new concept or concerning oneself with students' individual problems. The state administrators would certainly raise their eyebrows at a time card entry such as this:

Time: 10:45 to 12:20 p.m.
Activity: Thinking about a solution to John Jones' problem in grasping the theory of hydro-dynamics.

Other faculty members may not be so concerned with such seemingly trivial matters. Some are only using the teaching profession as a vehicle to aid them in advancing personal progress in research or professional advancement in their field.

One faculty member may spend an entire hour relating facts to his class—the same facts related in the textbook—while another encourages questions and discussions and brings in relevant material from outside. Time cards won't tell which is the better teacher.

The University is supposedly a place of open inquiry and learning. That is what education is all about. But if more and more controls are put on the University by higher systems and restrictions which may hinder the students' educational welfare, where is progress headed? Let's leave our universities free in which to expand.

Sociology professor surprised by Wright's 'attack' on Taylor

To the Editor:

I was surprised and a bit shocked to read the attack leveled against Dr. Dee Taylor of the anthropology department by Zackie Wright in the Kaimin of Friday, February 19, 1971. Although I do not personally know what transpired in that classroom, I do know Dr. Taylor very well and I know that he would not use a particular term for the purpose of insulting anyone.

I am not an anthropologist and I do not claim to be an expert on racial classification, but I strongly suspect that Mr. Wright selectively perceived the situation to be something quite different from what it actually was.

Certainly for some people the term Negro has negative connotations at the present time, but these connotations are subjective and personal—they do not pertain to the scientific taxonomy which Dr. Taylor was undoubtedly using.

The classification of races is by no means an easy matter, but anthropologists have developed a taxonomy which is widely, if not universally, accepted by scientists. This taxonomy has three broad divisions known as Caucasoid, Mongoloid and Negroid. (In alphabetical order.) This taxonomy is not based upon a single criterion such as skin color, but is made up of a composite of criteria including skin color, hair color, hair form, eye color, nasal form, head form and stature. The fact that these criteria are basically continuous rather than discrete adds to the problems of classification, but does not preclude the placement of most individuals into one of these three major taxonomic divisions. It should be noted that this threefold taxonomy is not only used by American social scientists but is in world-wide use and is the classification system used by the United Nations.

What should be clear is that the taxonomy used by Dr. Taylor is well established for scientific purposes. I am sure that Dr. Taylor would be happy (and not in the least condescending) to call a Black person Black rather than Negrownen referring to him outside of the scientific context. However, it would be incorrect for him to substitute the word Black for Negroid when using the scientific taxonomy. It is hardly in the interest of science to arbitrarily change taxonomic terms simply because someone or some group has personal objections to the non-scientific connotations which those terms might have. If taxonomic terms were changed on that basis, scientific disciplines would continually be faced with the problems of substituting new terms and trying to appease someone who voiced objections.

As a person belonging to the Caucasoid racial type I might well object to the non-scientific connotations of the term—but to my knowledge none of my ancestors came from that part of Russia. (Or any part of Russia for that matter. Shades of Communist and all that.)

On the other hand a Japanese might have personal objections to being classified as a Mongoloid because he couldn't trace his ancestry to Outer Mongolia. His objections might be even stronger if he compared the anthropological term Mongoloid with the same medical term referring to a serious congenital disease.

Whatever else might be said, the scientific term Negroid is completely neutral of value connotations. In fact, anthropologists were among the first to recognize that there are no pure races and their efforts at classification and comparison of racial types have probably done more to destroy traditional myths of racial superiority than anything else in the past century. These classifications neither degrade nor enhance anyone or any race. If beauty is in the eye of the beholder, so also are the negative connotations which might be suggested by a scientific taxonomy.

Peterson puzzled by fee strike editorial

Dear Mr. Cloherty:

Three points in your editorial, "Fees and faculty courage," (February 19) confuse me. The first, and least important, is your suggestion that the contemplated student fee strike "can be regarded much like a labor union strike. Instructors can either respect the picket lines or choose to cross them." It may well be my own density, but for the life of me I simply cannot get the disputants in the present controversy to seem properly analogous to the opposing sides in a typical labor-management controversy.

The second point is more important. I think that you do not have the facts straight. You suggest that instructors "allow fee strikers to enroll in their classes for credit." Neither the enrolling of students nor the granting of credit is a prerogative of the individual faculty member. Each is a function of the University: each is cloaked with rules and regulations established by or acquiesced in by the faculty. Administrators administer these rules and regulations, which seems to me a quite reasonable arrangement.

Technically, as I understand the University's regulations, instructors should not permit students to attend classes until they have completed registration. I have not made a survey, but it is my impression that most instructors on this campus seldom challenge any student's presence in the classroom. Although UM's registrations are relatively smooth, always there are students who fail to complete even non-financial registration procedures by the prescribed day, others who wait until the first of the month checks arrive before completing financial arrangements, late-registrants, and I suspect, a certain number of students who shop about for a few days before making final decisions—a practice formally encouraged at some other universities. Additionally, there is enough human error involved in registering and providing final class rolls for several thousand students that the University Registrar always asks instructors, in his instructions accompanying final grade report forms, to add the names of any students who have attended throughout the term. It seems to me, then, that you are asking faculty members to sign a form stating that they will continue to do what I think they have been doing anyway.

Finally, while I recognize the urge to make an editorial as strong as possible, it seems to me most unfair to say that money is the sole language of the Administration. In the past couple of years the leading spokesman for this University has on more than one occasion placed himself firmly on the side of the righteous, at times, one suspects, when a sole consideration of money for the University would have put him on the other side.

Sincerely yours,
ROBERT L. PETERSON
Department of History

Zimmer sick of editor's 'verbal diarrhea'

Mr. Cloherty,

Well, as usual, you have spoken. The main dilemma left the student is to discern from which end. In the first paragraph of Wednesday's editorial you label revenge "the most worthless of all causes" and accuse Central Board of trying to repay the Kaimin for past attacks. Then in the third paragraph you blatantly threaten to "point out some facts about CB" to "vindicate" the Kaimin. Why do you feel it necessary to vindicate the Kaimin? Do you feel guilty about something?

Then—to quote someone else—"In a childlike show of vengeance" (that word again) you go on to attack a Central Board member identified only as "the person who made the motion to cut the funds." Your statements about this unnamed carpetbagger verge on libel. Perhaps there is a reason for not naming him other than the one you state? But then if you have proof of your accusations, you have nothing to fear. As a public-minded editor, don't you owe your readers the responsibility of revealing the name of this "pompous, overbearing, obstreperous and inane" delegate so he may be seen in his true light?

I wrote this on yellow paper, thinking this would doubtless appeal to your journalistic style. I have suffered through your asinine editorials and twisted "news" articles about long enough.

Some people will think this misative an attempt to protect someone. It's not. I'm just sick of your verbal diarrhea. Blessedly, your havoc is nearly completed, and there may be hope on the horizon.

CWS tops Grizzlies

"We won the meet," UM swim coach Fred Stetson said yesterday after the Grizzly swimmers dropped a dual meet to Central Washington State, 57-56, Friday afternoon in the Grizzly Pool.

Stetson said the Tip swimmers outswam and out-performed Central Washington but technically lost the meet by one point because of some costly mental errors.

One of the Grizzly divers, according to Stetson, was scheduled to make an inward one-and-a-half tuck dive but made a mistake and executed the dive in pike position. This, he said, caused a fault dive, or a dive which is not scored.

Montana won both relays which were Central Washington's strongest events, Stetson said.

Sophomore Dave Garard and senior Kurt Von Tegen were both double winners for Montana. Garard won the 50-yard freestyle and the 200-yard butterfly, while Von Tegen won the 100 and 200-yard freestyle events. His 1:48.9 clocking in the 200-yard freestyle established a Grizzly Pool record. He set the old mark of 1:49.0 in 1970.

Stetson said the loss was a heart-breaker, but added that the Tip swimmers performed well and benefited from the workout.

The next competition for the Grizzly swimmers will be Friday and Saturday in the State AAU Senior Championships. The UM team is the defending champion of the meet.

Results of the UM-Central Washington Meet:

400-yard medley relay — 1.

Montana, (Jensen, Conner, Homstad, Poole), 3:51.6.

Grizzlies maul Bengals

By TOM SEERY

Montana Kaimin Reporter

Behind a 31-point performance from 6-4 junior guard Mike Vernon, the hustling Montana Grizzlies notched their fifth Big Sky Conference basketball victory, downing the Idaho State Bengals, 85-64, last night in the Field House.

Vernon connected on 12 of 19 field shots and hit 7 of 8 free shots for game scoring honors. Bengal scoring sensation Willie Humes, who had a 34.9 scoring average going into the game, was held to 21 points, 17 of them coming the second half. Humes scored 49 points against the Grizzlies last Monday night in Pocatello as the Bengals beat the Tips, 109-77.

The first half of play was ragged, with both teams having trouble shooting and passing. After 10 minutes, the Tips managed a 15-10 lead. Then the Grizzly defense tightened up. Don Wetzel and Vernon went to work on the fast break and Montana hit 18 points while holding the Bengals to nine. At intermission, the scored stood Montana 33, Idaho 19.

The defeat knocked Idaho State out of the Big Sky Conference race. The Bengals could have tied Weber State if they had beaten Montana and then won their last two games against Idaho and Gonzaga. The Grizzly victory clinched the title for Weber.

Idaho State made only 6 of 41 shots from the field in the first half for 14 per cent. Willie Humes went 0-11 from the floor, as both Wetzel and Vernon kept a close watch on the nation's third leading scorer. Montana also had trouble finding the range in the first half and hit 13 of 34 for 38 per cent.

Idaho State was called for three technical fouls in the contest, two on Humes and one on coach Dan Miller.

In the second half, Idaho State started finding the range, but could not get closer than 11 points to the fired-up Grizzlies. After ten minutes, the Grizzly offense started rolling and widened the lead to 21 points, 58 to 37.

Humes led the Bengal scoring attack with 21, but hit only 7 of 33 tries from the field. He was followed by DeWitt Walton with 15 points and Abe Gibbons with 10. Walton controlled the boards, pulling down a game high 20 rebounds.

Three Grizzlies besides Vernon hit in double figures. Wetzel made 18 points, Ray Howard had 11 and Lonzo Lewis added 10.

The Bengals finished the game with 26 per cent accuracy from the field. They shot a total of 92 times and connected on only 24 attempts. Montana took 58 shots at the basket and made 29 for 50 per cent.
